The French Minister.

The Buffalo Courier, referring to the startling and inexplicable event of Wednesday, furnishes a brief sketch of the distinguished suicide. He was scarcely forty years of age, yet had won fame as a journalist, a publicist, an author and a scholar. The highest testimonial had been given him an appointment to a prominent post by a government whose favor he had never courted, and whose meed he had unmercifully exposed. He was one of the darlings of France, and a pet of fortune. It is difficult to conceive that such a man had been brooding, perhaps for years, over the idea of suicide.

The telegraph two days before announced that M. Paradol was prostrated by the extreme loss of the Capitol, and this illness may have aggravated the mental malady from which he suffered.

Doubtless also the state of affairs in Europe contributed its share to depression, and cloud his mind. We can only infer what were his sentiments with respect to the conflict now impending, but his contributions to the Journal des Débats in 1866 testified to his deep-seated dread of the aggrandizement of Germany. Like M. Thiers, of whom he was the warm admirer, M. Paradol also urged the claim of France to compensation for the gains of Prussia, and his view of the foreign relations and future prospects of France, was a gloomy one. He saw clearly also, and said forcibly, that European wars were usually in the interests of rulers, rather than of the people, and that Louis Napoleon regarded the stability of his own dynasty, rather than the true glory and freedom of France, in his intramodulating with continental affairs. One expression, iterated by M. Paradol was, that war and the progress of the people were incompatible and that liberty could only flourish in the soil of peace. We can well imagine that the new Minister did not contemplate with pleasure his services of a master whose selfish designs he had often published to his countrymen, that, too, at a crisis in large part due to the necessities of the dynasty to which he had always been hostile.

M. Paradol sailed from France on the 21st instant and arrived in this country on the 12th in total ignorance of the startling events which the ten intervening days had developed. It is perhaps reasonable to suppose that the shock of recovering the news which closely followed on his arrival did not partunsettling the Minister's mental state. But none the less, who could have thought of such end for the clear-headed, well balanced, thoroughly experienced man of the world, the Prevost Paradol!

THE IMPRISONED FENIANS.—The Abt. AUBERT AUSTRIAN states that General Star and his fellow prisoners, Col. Ticonson and Capt. Mannix, have been destined to the hospital department of Aubert prison, and will have comparatively comfortable positions. They are treated as political offenders, and not as convicted felons.

The Abt. AUSTRIAN thinks "his is eminently proper, and creditable to the authorities of the prison as well as the officers of the Court who recommended the prisoners to their leniency. Public sentiment is unanimously on the side of the captives, and petitions for pardon would elicit the signatures of nine tenths of the people."

We are not quite sure about the unanimity of public sentiment in favor of the prisoners, on the contrary, we believe that the balance of public opinion is decidedly against them.

The following card, published by the captured Fenians shows that at least, they are not ungrateful.

A CARD
AUBERT PRISON, July 16, 1870

We, the undersigned, Fenian prisoners, do return our sincere thanks to our attorney, A. J. Parker, of Albany, D. C. Feely, of Rochester, J. P. Fauro and Henry Chesebro, of Canandaigua, for the able manner in which they defended us in our recent trials. Also to the citizens of Canandaigua, and especially to Frank D. Chamberlain, for the kind treatment they showed us during our stay among them—a kindness that can never be forgotten—a debt of gratitude that we can never pay.

other things, he said he had often thought how restricted one's conversation must be when one was visiting a man who was to be hanged in half an hour. He went on in a most surprising manner to imagine all sorts of difficulties in the way of becoming interested in the poor fellow. "Suppose the 'it' should be a rainy morning while you are making the call, you could not possibly indulge in the remark. 'We shall have fine weather to-morrow,' air, for what would that be to him? For my part, I think," said he, "I should confine my observations to the days of Julius Caesar or King Alfred."

At another time, when speaking of what was constantly said about him in certain newspapers, he observed: "I notice that about once in seven years I become the victim of a paragraph disease. It breaks out in England, travels to India by the overland route, gets to America by the same line, strikes the heart of the Rocky Mountains, and rebounding back to Europe, it appears in the steppes of Russia from innumerable and extreme cold." When he told he was not under observation, and that tonfouler would not be frowned upon or gazed at with astonishment, he gave himself up without reserve to healthy amusement and strengthen his mirth. It was his misfortune to make people happy. Words of good cheer were always to his lips, and he was always doing what he could to lighten the lot of all who came into his beautiful presence.

His talk was simple, natural and direct, never dropping into circumlocution, nor elocution. Now that he is dead, who has known him intimates for any considerable period of time will linger over his slender record for and his engaging manner with children; his cheery "good day" to poor people he happened to be passing in the road; his trustful and earnest "Please God," when he was promising himself any special pleasure, like rejoining an old friend or returning again to scenes he loved. At such times his voice had an irresistible patina in it, and his smile diffused a sensation like music. When he came into the presence of squallid or degraded persons, such as one sometimes encounters in almanacs or prisons, he had such soothing words to scatter here and there that those who had been "badly hurt by the others" listened gladly, and without knowing who it was that found it in his heart to speak so kindly to them.

Miscellaneous.

When the last census of Massachusetts was taken, in 1865, there were fifty-eight towns in the State in which there was no colored person.

A journalist who has been spending a fortnight in the White Mountains, says he has enjoyed himself very much, having fallen into six rivers, sprained his ankle, skinned his face and neck, and broken three ribs the first nine days.

The great rose show of the season took place recently in London. The exhibition was a complete success, some 18,000 visitors being present; several hundred varieties of roses were shown, varying in color from pink to scarlet, and from white to almost black. A large number of prizes were given, and some specially for table decorations for dinner at the Rouse, of which there were some excellent examples that attracted great attention from the ladies.

A writer in the American Journal of Insanity, strenuously advocates didactic and clinical teaching of insanity and other cerebral and nervous disorders, in medical schools. The existence of practicability, Dr. Hammond, of New York, and Dr. Handay, of St. Louis, have instituted clinics on these subjects. In France there were in 1866, according to official statistical returns, 50,726 insane, and 39,932 idiots and cretins; in England, in 1868, there were 33,203; and in the United States, probably not less than 60,000. Insanity is acknowledged to be a physical disease, amenable to treatment, curable in a large proportion of cases; and yet it is almost ignored in practical medicine, and in medical schools received little or no attention. The effects of clinical teaching on the insane subjects themselves are represented to be salutary.

The school Washington, built at Hingham by John Souther, in 1811, and for a time was a school between Hingham and Boston, not being the principal mode of communication between persons between the two places—has recently been sold for further services, his timbers being in too good condition to be broken up. She is 37 tons burden; cost $2,700, and sold, after her nearly 30 years of service, for $250. Mr. Souther, who remained one of the owners, to the last, is nearly 90 years of age, and is still hale and hearty, his constitution, as well as his workmanship, being of the A 1 order.

David Newson gives, in the St. Louis Democrat, an account of the ascent of Mount Hood, one of the highest, if not the highest, mountain in North America. The ascent of this volcano does not seem to have been very difficult. The summit of the mountain is a crater 3 miles across, filled with cinders, rocks and snow. Through this debris smoke, steam, and gases issue, and many of the rocks are set to the wind. The southern side of this crater is broken away, so that on the other sides they extend up to a height of 3,000 feet. On the southwesterly extremity of this wall is the main opening of the crater, from which rises a constant column of steam and smoke. The boiling point of a thermometer at the summit was 180 degrees, which would indicate a height of 17,640 feet.

Turkish troops have just taken possession of Tadmir, the site of the ancient city of Palmyra. Several bloody encounters took place between the Turks and the Bedouins of the Aeneas, but the latter were repelled with considerable loss. Europeans can now visit the celebrated City of Palms without fear of being taxed by Lady Digby and her Bedouin husband.
